On a pale pink background the face of a Maori man is etched in dark burgundy ink. The feathered edge of a korowai cloak sweeps around his neck and shoulders. He has short dark hair, dark eyebrows and his dark eyes are narrowed, angled slightly leftwards. Ta moko or Maori tattoo adorn his face: lines on his forehead curve up and out from the inner edge of his eyebrows; lines curve down around his chin from the outer edges from his nostrils; and his cheek is marked with concentric circles.
