Mark Devcich, Untitled, Acrylic on canvas, 2020. This picture is on a stretched canvas 25cm square with no frame.

Brightly coloured shards, triangles and shafts of colour cross the canvas like searchlights.

This picture is full of straight lines and angular shapes. The colours are striking: bright orange at the centre, with patches of lime green and dark bluey green. There's also pink, lilac, and brown. Darker shades of the colours form as one colour sits on the other colours previously laid beneath it.

Superimposed on the colours are rows of creamy white trapezoids that give the impression of light streaming through rows of rectangular windows onto the canvas.
