Pam Sherlock, Acrylic on paper, 2019, Picture 19cm wide and 28cm high with a wide white border, and a plain wooden frame that measures 43cm wide and 53cm high.

In the centre stands a palm tree growing up from a dark brownish green ground that undulates like waves. Greenish-brown trunk rings are picked out in horizontal brushstrokes. Its palm fronds are deep pinky red, bulging at the top of the trunk as if it's laden with fruit.

Bright pinky red splotches with red tails heading towards the ground float at either side of the palm tree at a similar height. A tendril of red flows diagonally from the one on the left to the trunk of the palm in the centre.

Behind is an expanse of lime green in horizontal strokes the width of your forearm topped at the horizon with almost regular mounds each the size of a fingertip.

The sky fades down from dark turquoise at the top through sky blue pink behind the palm to pale blue at the horizon.
